Located on Diputació Street, it represents a privileged space of the old architectural modernism. In an eclectic modernist style and designed by the architect Enric Sagnier, Casa Garriga Nogués is a building located in the Golden Square, a group of blocks in the Eixample known by this name for the large number of modernist buildings they concentrate. The façade of Casa Garriga is a mixture of classical, baroque, and modernist elements, among which stands out a balcony supported by four columns that the sculptor Eusebi Arnau created to represent the four stages of life. Inside the house, the majestic marble staircase with sinuous lines and the stained glass windows made by Antoni Rigalt are particularly striking.
